

{One Million & Counting: FPL's Record-Setting Year}

THE FAYETTEVILLE PUBLIC LIBRARY 2008 ANNUAL REPORT

Director's Letter

Lorraine Brewer & Louise Schaper

An historic year for the Fayetteville Public Library!

We are delighted to report that 2008 marked a significant milestone – by year end cardholders had checked out more than 1 million items. That's more than 2,800 books, magazines, e-books, films, audiobooks and parenting kits borrowed every day of the year. The 1 millionth check out by donor Jim Blair represented the culmination of 11 years of annual increases in use resulting from a strategic effort to improve services. Clearly, Fayetteville residents appreciate and use their public library.

Reaching one million checkouts was the result of a long journey toward excellence. In 1997, only 270,000 items were borrowed and the library lacked basic services like evening hours and a good collection.

With citizen input and data from comparable cities, FPL Board of Trustees and staff set out to create a library that matched community expectations. By adopting and/or re-inventing best practices, services gradually improved. Residents began flocking to use its collections and attend programs, which continued to increase after the opening of Blair Library. Then, in 2005, FPL received the prestigious Library of the Year Award from Library Journal.

Use has continued to grow during 2008. Most notable examples include a 37% increase in the use of the teen collection, a 10% increase in the use of computers, a 10% increase in new library cards, a 7% increase in attendance at children's programs and a 6% increase in the use of children's collections.

Another historic milestone was a joint meeting of the library's Board of Trustees and the City Council. Trustees lobbied for continued support and expanded hours, which drew the support of most aldermen, including now-mayor Lioneld Jordan. During the course of the joint meeting, trustees shared some interesting facts about the library: (1) 900 new library cards are issued each month, (2) the library saves residents $20 million a year by making books and other materials available for loan, (3) 72% of cardholders are age 18 to 60 and (4) it costs the city about $28 per capita to support the library.

Now that the economy is in recession, the library is an even more valuable resource. Residents can use information, communication and entertainment resources they need but can't afford to purchase. Even more importantly, parents have free access to books and programs that will help their children become avid readers and successful students.

In addition, the library's Non-Profit Resource Center provides free help to all non-profits in a four-county area in their quest to build capacity and better serve their clients.

The library's 150+ volunteers make a huge difference. Just look at the volunteer-led Reading Roadshow. Every week volunteers reach out to children in local Head Start centers, Children's House, Elizabeth Richardson Center and other day care settings to connect pre-schoolers to books. Volunteers also deliver books to the homebound and help children read through an innovative program called "Sit. Stay. Read!" in which children read to a trained canine partner.

On the library's fundraising front, year two of a five-year effort to meet the National Endowment for the Humanities Challenge Grant goal of $1.8 million dollars was successfully concluded. Two major gifts included $100,000 from the Willard and Pat Walker Charitable Foundation and $35,000 from the Friends of FPL. Capital campaign donors who are completing their pledges graciously rededicated their gifts to the NEH Challenge Grant to establish an endowment for collections and programs.

The library continued to aggressively pursue its green initiative. The effort to replace conventional lights with LEDs began in the parking garage and lobby, and a green computing initiative shaved more than 600,000 watt hours off the library's use each day.

With an historic milestone achieved, the library looks forward to a brilliant 2009 providing relevant and timely collections, fast internet, laptops for checkout, more e-resources as well as educational and enjoyable programs. The library is undertaking a space study to help determine how best to accommodate the growing use of services and continuing to reduce the library's carbon footprint through green computing, alternative energy and more efficient lighting. Every dollar saved in energy use can be used to enhance the collection and further the library's ability to provide services.

2008 Highlights Calendar

January 20: The library's second annual Adult Winter Reading Festival kicked off. More than 570 people read 2,395 books during the 13-week program – almost a 50 percent increase from the previous year.

February: FPL launches Wanderer on the Web, an online version of its literary arts magazine. The site allows students to blog about favorite books, submit artwork and browse past issues of The Wanderer.

May 1: The library hosted a volunteer appreciation luncheon for its 155 volunteers.

May 9: A portrait of library benefactor Jim Blair is unveiled during a reception at Blair Library. The painting, by Virginia artist Henry Wingate, was hung in the library's media and magazine section. A $100,000 gift from the Willard and Pat Walker Charitable Foundation for the NEH Challenge Grant was announced.

May: The library became a U.S. Passport Acceptance Facility.

May: FPL staff members Willow Hancock and Paula Heaney completed their master's degrees in Library and Information Science.

June 7: Summer Reading Club kicked off. The 10-week program attracted 1,417 children and 198 teens.

June 9-12: The library hosted a Solar Bug Tug building workshop. Students in 5th through 12th grades worked in teams to build solar-powered vehicles with University of Arkansas engineering students. The vehicles were raced during the annual Solar Splash event at Lake Fayetteville. The event was sponsored by a grant from the IEEE Foundation.

June 23: Amory Lovins, physicist, author and pioneer in sustainability research, spoke to more than 200 people at the library. The talk was presented through a partnership with the University of Arkansas's Applied Sustainability Center.

Summer: The library conducted a focus group on its website content and overall library satisfaction. Another survey assessed how library holds are managed.

September 15: Fayetteville City Council members met in a first-ever joint meeting with members of the library's Board of Trustees. During the meeting, the groups toured the library and discussed future priorities.

October 18: David Malone of Fayetteville was appointed to a four-year term on the state library board. Malone was the first representative from Fayetteville appointed to the board.

November 12: Author Molly Giles spoke during the 5th annual Gathering of the Groups, a luncheon for Northwest Arkansas area book clubs.

December 26: The library checked out its 1 millionth item of the year, a first in FPL history.
